WORKING WITH OUR STUDENTS:

1. Guests must adhere to class start and end time. When classes exceed their given time, students often end up late for their next class.
2. We offer our guests a musician who will provide accompaniment for your classes. If you would prefer to use your own music, please let us know as soon as possible so we can notify the musician that they will not be needed.
3. Our students are curious about the research and professional experiences that motivate and inspire you. A faculty member will be there to introduce you to their students on your first day. Come prepared to share relevant information about your own training and career. Additionally, if you are working with certain concepts or theories in your rehearsals or classes, please let students know about literature they can read or artists they can research to broaden their horizons. This is an educational setting and we believe in teaching dancers who are knowledgeable and articulate citizens of the world. Due to the educational nature and mission of our classes, guests are not allowed to promote businesses, services, nor literature in an attempt to make a financial gain from students.
4. If you believe a student behaves in a way that you find disrespectful or inappropriate, please let the student know privately why this behavior does not belong in your class or rehearsal. Please also tell the director of the school or the ballet/modern dance program head about the incident. If the behavior continues, a guest can ask the student to leave the class or rehearsal.
5. If you are accustomed to working with professional companies, you may find that university students have slightly different expectations. We ask that artists be aware of three elements that may be different from other settings where you work:
 - a. Please be mindful that some students may not be comfortable with certain types of physical touch when you are correcting a movement or suggesting ideas. Please ask a student before touching their body and remember that comfort levels can change day to day, or even within the span of a class. We ask that guests refrain from any kind of touch that could be harmful or perceived as invasive by a student.
 - b. In some settings artists may use strong language to get a point across and we ask that guests avoid using any kind of language that could be interpreted as vulgar or offensive. We also ask that clothing that displays such language be avoided.
 - c. If your class or choreography contains movement material that incorporates mature elements, such as sexually suggestive movement or aggressive and potentially dangerous movement, we ask that you introduce this material carefully. Please keep in mind that some of our students come from backgrounds with strong religious beliefs and this material may be unfamiliar or discombobulating. If you sense that students are uncomfortable with executing such movement, please allow for conversation about and/or adaptation of the material.
6. When teaching master classes, it's challenging to give as much individual attention as you might in your own home classes with regular clientele over a period of time. While it may be impossible to learn all the dancers' names, we hope that guests can offer individual as well as group corrections and suggestions. Our students are a community of unique individuals, eager to learn from you how they can improve their approaches to dancing, choreographing, and performing.

I have read and understand the above terms of this agreement. Signatures sent by electronic means will be honored as originals.
